Hugh Jackman is Wolverine. Hugh Jackman is an Audi brand ambassador. And in the movie "The Wolverine" the hero drives an Audi R8 Spyder. A perfect mix of dream man, dream car and superhero. For us, it was also the perfect basis for an interview of a different kind.

We know Hugh Jackman as the tough guy in those Hollywood blockbusters, with bulging muscles and designer stubble. But how does 2008's "Sexiest Man Alive" see himself? And how does his love for his wife of 18 years, Deborra, influence his work? The star of Wolverine reveals all this and gives us a peek into his soul, which – hard as it is to believe – makes him seem like an even bigger superhero.

When the Audi R8 Spyder appears on the screen in "The Wolverine," every moviegoer will realize that this film has some extraordinary characters to offer. Powerful. Dynamic. Extrovert.

Wolverine, also known by his civilian name James Howlett, or as he calls himself: Logan. A mutant if ever there were one. With an indestructible skeleton, retractable claws and an incredible ability to recover from injuries. He's torn between his desire to be human, and a compulsion to seek revenge on his enemies.
